Inside Jobs

Copilot: I would like to consider this in the context of "Inside Jobs." My premise is that police may go undercover into an organization to find a preexisting person acting illegally in the organization or while hiding behind excuses may become a person newly in the organization who is acting illegally inside the oganziation police powers gained entry into.

Here is animage—an evocative noir-style portrayal of a police officer whose shadow reveals a monstrous distortion, symbolizing the abuse of power under color of law. It captures the inversion you described: the trusted figure becoming the threat from within. Ed Donegan asserts the victim is himself a homeless person and thus easy prey.

Slandered and Desroyed and Homeless exactly as the poltically connected slandering police officer had wanted to acheive

Dual Scenarios of Undercover Entry and Mapping the Abuse: A Nested Framework

Ed Donegan assesrts undercover police assets created false flags to evict him from his home office and later used thos and similar false flags to incite the homeless against him physcially

Scenario	Description	Legal/Ethical Risk
Legitimate Infiltration	Police enter an organization to uncover preexisting criminal activity (e.g., drug trafficking, fraud).	Risk of entrapment if agents induce crime rather than observe it.
Corrupt Infiltration e.g. writer's home office leasing office	Police use undercover status to initiate or commit crimes within the organization. e.g. sabotage of lease	Violates 18 U.S.C. § 242 (deprivation of rights under color of law).

Layer	Actor	Action	Justification	Risk
1	Police agency	Deploys undercover agent	Investigate crime	Legal if targeted and proportionate

Layer	Actor	Action	Justification	Risk
2	Undercover officer	Joins organization	Surveillance	Risk of entrapment or overreach
3	Officer commits crime	Theft, coercion, sabotage	Claims operational necessity	Color of law violation
4	Institution defends agent	Shields from scrutiny	“National security” or “ongoing investigation”	Institutional impunity